Have you ever wondered what it would be like to spend a few hours of free time making a real difference in your local community and environment? If you've been curious about volunteering at Bonds Meadow, let me take you on a little journey into what a typical morning might be like.

Let's say it's a sunny morning. We arrive at the Honeysuckle and bramble-covered green container behind the kissing gate at the Sands Lane entrance. You can't miss the sound of birdsong and the gentle rustle of leaves. The air feels fresh, and there's a sense of calm that instantly puts you at ease. You meet up with the other volunteers, a friendly mixed-gender bunch who will give you a warmest of welcomes. The morning's task is raking and removing cut grass from the meadows. If left, the decaying grass will retain nutrients in the meadow that are surprisingly not the optimal growing conditions for a wildflower meadow. It's incredibly important work that benefits the biodiversity of the entire site, creating a haven for insects and wildlife. The more diverse the plant species in our wildflower meadows, the greater the support for pollinators like butterflies and bees, habitat for birds, voles, mice, hedgehogs and insects All contributing to the overall health and diversity of the ecosystem.

As you get stuck in with raking and carting to the margins, you quickly realize how therapeutic it is to work with your hands in the soil. There's something deeply satisfying about seeing the immediate impact of your efforts. And the best part? You're surrounded by nature.

But volunteering at Bonds Meadow isn't just about the work. It's about the people, too. Over a shared cake during coffee break, you'll find yourself chatting with people from all walks of life. Some are passionate about conservation, others just want to give back, and a few are there to learn new skills or spend time outdoors. The sense of camaraderie is incredible. You'll laugh, share stories, and maybe even pick up a few gardening tips, a book recommendation, a must watch movie or TV programme. Volunteering isn't just good for the meadow, it's good for you, too. It's a chance to unplug from the hustle and bustle of daily life, or to get out of that comfy armchair and exercise. You'll leave feeling refreshed, accomplished, and maybe even a little inspired.

Of course, not every day is sunny. There are some days of drizzle and plodding about in muddy wet conditions, or you may find yourself setting too on pulling invasive Himalayan balsam or Alexander that refuses to cooperate. But those are all part of the experience. They make the sunny days, the blooming flowers, and the sight of wildlife thriving in the meadow even more special. So, what's it like to be a Bonds Meadow volunteer? It's about connection to nature, to your community, and to yourself. It's about knowing that your time and effort are making a real difference, and it can be a lot of fun. For more information visit our website; www.bondsmeadow.org

Cashless Supermarkets

So as the march towards a dystopian future for us ordinary mortals continues, I am informed that four of our wonderful British supermarkets are complying with the wishes of the World Economic Forum (home of the elitists, look it up) and are soon to be 'Card Only' - no longer accepting cash. I would hope that the great British public will stop using them in their millions. No cash - no customers! But I am awfully afraid this will not happen as the strangely compliant people of the UK continue to do the bidding of the rich and powerful. This role out is in preparation for Central Bank Digital Currency which means the government and the banks can view all transactions as they happen and stop the payment if they so desire - and they will, make no mistake. The removal of cash is coming if you let it. Remember those days not so long ago when you went shopping in the town with your cash and spent it as you wanted to? Those days are ending, soon the banks will have to agree to ALL your purchases and the silent majority will allow it to happen by doing nothing.

I have been called a conspiracy theorist many times since the Covid plandemic and so far I have unfortunately been proved right each time. Did you know they are now withdrawing Covid vaccs' following the high number of unexplained deaths of young people SINCE the pandemic? >>As as aside see 'Healthy Living' on page 13 for more supermarket unholy shenanigans.

Potty Training

Last month I mentioned kids starting school still not having been potty trained, and this week I see a report that confirms just that. A report by 'Cheeky' confirms that just 61% of kids are potty trained by 2.5 years old, compared to 95% in 2004. Fact: 7% of children are STARTING FULL TIME SCHOOL still wearing nappies.

Reusable nappy users potty train earlier - by age 2.5, 72% were dry, compared to just 54% of disposable users. Why does this matter?

Because waiting longer to potty train can impact a child's independence and confidence. And disposable nappy companies aren't helping—their business model relies on keeping kids in nappies for as long as possible. There's a sobering thought.

StarmaGeddon Sabre-Rattling

I saw a picture recently of Keir Starmageddon sitting in the captain's chair in the control room of a British nuclear submarine. This was a photo-opportunity for Starmer to attempt to position himself as a world leader as he apparently commented something along the lines of 'Putin is scared because we have more nuclear weapons than him' What the heck? He has also 'held talks' with Macron, who has told his populace to prepare for war! Are these two wannabees for real? I seriously doubt Britain has got the capability either in personnel numbers or hardware, to go to war. Starmer should leave negotiating to Trump, who at least is talking about a peaceful solution and despite the European bluster, will hopefully negotiate a lasting peace. And as for Starmer talking of conscription - I will just say that in the last few years many young people don't even know what sex they are, (thanks to the loony left) and are far too busy being offended, so the likelihood of them fighting a war is nonsensical.

Who would fight on Britain's behalf now anyway? Starmer has paid scant regard to British pensioners whilst showering Ukraine with billions of pounds. When it came to foreign aid, that infamous and disputed £22 billion black hole was not even mentioned. He has disregarded the will of the people to stop the boats - instead giving illegal immigrants everything from hotels to, spending money, X boxes and driving lessons. I think the British public might just tell Starmer to stick his pantomime war. The elitists run the world but why is it always the ordinary people who have to lose their lives in their millions at the behest of their governments - Not this time. You can wrongly call me 'Far Right' if you want to, but it is more a case of Right So Far!

Mum of Three Wins Prestigious Business Award After Welcoming Third Child

Juggling the demands of running multiple businesses while raising three young children is no easy feat, but Rachel Ducker has proven that it's possible. After welcoming her third child in August last year, the entrepreneur's business Bounce Magazine, has now been recognised with the prestigious 'Business Hero' award at The East of England Small Business Awards 2024.

Rachel is the driving force behind three successful businesses. Balancing entrepreneurship and motherhood has required determination, resilience, and adaptability. From managing client projects to overseeing editorial content and business growth, Rachel has continued to push forward, demonstrating that women can thrive in business without sacrificing family life.

Her journey hasn't been without challenges. The shift to digital media during the COVID-19 pandemic forced her to completely rethink her approach to the magazine. Despite setbacks, she remained committed to her goals, rebuilding and expanding her ventures while also growing her family.

Bounce Magazine, originally a modest monthly handout in Bury St Edmunds, has evolved into a trusted and engaging digital publication. The transition from print to digital was a turning point, with Rachel leading the magazine through uncertain times to become a widely recognised platform with a growing readership and significant social media presence. The publication continues to provide valuable content and support businesses, reinforcing its strong community roots.

Alongside these ventures, Rachel also has over 34,000 followers on her Instagram account, where she demonstrates how she balances family life with work. Through her platform, she shares insights into her daily routines, business successes, and the realities of juggling multiple roles, inspiring other women to pursue their own ambitions.

Ms. Ducker shared her thoughts on winning the award: "Balancing a growing family with running multiple businesses hasn't been easy, but I wanted to show that motherhood and entrepreneurship can go hand in hand. Receiving this recognition after 13 years of hard work—just months after having my third child—makes it even more special." Picture: Rachel Ducker

Pick up a pack of tomatoes in Tesco from Nightingale Farms or chicken from Aldi's Ashfield Farm and you assume they are farm-fresh products direct from select producers with traceable provenance. Think again. These are 'fake farm' brands whose sole aim is to give the impression that they come from English smallholdings, when this couldn't be further from the truth, with devastating consequences.

It could be a mass-produced tomato from an unsustainable, plastic-covered, Spanish holding, or intensively reared, factory-farmed meat that's polluting British rivers. With its images of traditional tractors, animals on grass and healthy trees, it's easy to be fooled by branding that has a bucolic air to it. Every single day, shoppers are duped and it's an issue emblematic of a deeply dysfunctional UK food system.

For the last six years, a number of big supermarkets have sold fake farm brands despite threats of legal action, consumer campaigns and angry farmer groups rightfully raging about deceit, but to no avail. Back in 2016 there was a media frenzy, as the race to the bottom of the grocery market saw fake farm labels proliferate. At the time, Tesco's former chief executive, Dave Lewis, told The Independent: "Our new fresh food brands are performing very well, with over two-thirds of our customers having bought products from the new range."

The issue went quiet through the fog of Brexit, the pandemic then pinched consumers' pockets and the cost-of-living crisis set in. During this shaky period, Tesco continued to fill their shelves with fake brands from the likes of Willow and Redmere Farms, seven in total, with reassuring messaging such as 'trusted,' 'stringent quality' and 'high standards,' while Aldi ploughed on with its own fictional farm labels, with zero motivation to change.

Wholly unethical, yet inarguabley profitable, David Hughes, Emeritus Professor of Food Marketing at Imperial College London, points out that "for Tesco, using fake farm brands has worked out really well in terms of securing the lower end of the market against really hot competition."

Earlier this year the issue reared its head again with headlines such as 'Pressure mounts to ban supermarkets use of fake farm names' in the Daily Express and 'Calls to ban fake farm names' in the Daily Mail with fresh pleas from Riverford's founder Guy Singh-Watson to ditch them. This was part of evidence given to UK Parliament, which is investigating supermarket superpower. There is also an ongoing government consultation on making food labelling fairer, which is focused on country of origin and method of production.

Should supermarkets be allowed to get away with this? NO! Are these fake brands hiding bad farm practices? Of course. But the fact is, we don't have the data because there is no direct route to any of these 'farms'. They don't exist. And what goes on inside the 'units' or factories supplying Woodside or Suntrail Farms is impossible to fathom and that lack of clarity on provenance and production suits the supermarkets just fine. Yet there are a few things we do know.

Tesco buys chicken from Avara Foods, one of the UK's biggest food producers owned by US multinational Cargill. In 2020, the Guardian and partners uncovered evidence that Cargill supplied Tesco, Asda, McDonald's, Nando's and others with chicken fed on imported soya linked to thousands of forest fires and at least 300 sq miles of tree clearance in the Cerrado savannah. These are fake 'British' farms that can be traced all the way back to the rainforests.

Tesco sells chicken under its Willow Farm brand. Avara Foods now faces a multi-million pound legal case over pollution of the River Wye from law firm Leigh Day. The industrial scale of the issue, involving 23 million chickens at any one time is mind boggling, affecting 4,000 square kilometres of land in England and Wales, two and a half times the size of Greater London. It's not a farm, but an Intensive Poultry Unit (IPU) – despite the bucolic name on the packet.

"People are going into Tesco, purchasing Willow Farm chickens supplied by Avara, and not knowing that these products are potentially contributing to the destruction of this river. Fake farm brands give the sense of wholesome, small-scale production, masking the reality of industrial systems that produce so much of our groceries," explains Rob Percival, Head of Food Policy at the Soil Association.

"Look behind these brands and they can also be unethical in terms of how they treat farmers. You have tens of thousands of producers potentially supplying into these single fake brands, disadvantaging farmers as well as consumers."

Paranormal Investigators

They are a peculiar breed, these 'Paranormal Investigators'. Firstly their very name confirms their limited ability, 'Para'-normal. This is (in today's society) applied to anything that is outside of the 'normal' life experience or scientific explanation. It is quite correct as many if not all 'investigators' live life outside of an enlightened, awakened existence. They are children of the society they were born into. Complete with society's belief systems and structure.

If however we all lived a more connected life, a life of spiritual awareness and universal knowledge, we would all know that such things are very real, not only that but we would all be aware that the universe is poulated by many, many species of what we call 'extra-terrestrial'. We would be aware of our undeniable link to nature, planet earth and every creature that runs, walks, crawls or slithers upon it, as well as every plant from the tiny daisy to the mighty redwood tree. But we don't. Society has not been built like that. We have a myriad of religious belief systems built on everything from fear, sin and quilt, to the promise of being met in 'heaven' by 57 virgins backed up with the threat of an eternity in a lake of fire and torture. All bunkham.

In a universe of infinite possibilities, mankind teaches only limitations. The result is that sadly the populace do not believe in life on other planets, which is plentiful and they visit us regularly. What you are thinking as you read this might demonstrate to you how effective your indoctrination has been! We are part of nature, alive in energy just as every living thing. To not believe in the healing power of plants, is not to believe in nature itself. Is it not strange that mankind separates himself from nature, seeing himself as master of it, rather than being merely a single strand in the web of life. For every disease or bodily condition on Earth there is a plant/herb to treat and cure it. Mankind ignores this, and takes a severely flawed path.

As a lifelong (virtually) empath, I often wonder what good these so called Paranormal Investigators actually do. They set themselves up with all sorts of equipment to measure (apparently) when a ghost is present and what it is saying to you. Then the 'investigator' will try to get the ghost to set off a piece of equipment or move something static in the room. Once this has happened the investigator will have recorded his 'proof' of haunting and his work is done. That, after all, is the reason they were contracted, to see what is going on and provide proof of a 'presence'. Added to this some so-called investigators will attempt to goad the spirit into reacting violently towards them and that could prove dangerous or at the least, very frightening - but it makes a good You Tube video! Some of these investigators have carved out a good living producing programmes for TV, streaming and You Tube, where they garner many viewers and/or followers. Most of the videos are lacking of any real proof of haunting. None of them offer any real assistance to the spirits lingering there, and that represents a monumental failure.

In my life of working with the energy of the planet I have visited many sites where spirits linger and are manifestly visible or audible at times. To me the primary goal was always to find out why the spirits linger and to ensure that they are collected in love by higher evolved spirits.

My concern is never 'why are they opening cupboards and walking the halls'. It is why are they here? What keeps them here and what is the simplest path to a wonderful resolution?

Dear Bugle

We all love our pets but this new trend of 'dog friendly' really isn't making it as such for us!! Sorry but how can it be hygienic eating a meal with dogs under the table? Surely it isn't expecting too much to leave your pet at home or in your vehicle for an hour? And surely it's totally unfair on the dogs too, far too many lovely foodie aromas around?

Last year we stayed in a fabulous country hotel in Wales, not only was it dog friendly but they had purpose built kennels attached to the building yet still owners brought them in to the restaurant! How selfish. Our bedding smelt of digs and because of that we will never return. What do other readers think?

Halesworth Dementia Carers' Fund with Pippa Evans

H.D.C.F. is delighted to express heartfelt gratitude to Heveningham Hall Country Fair Trust for their ongoing support in awarding us a very generous grant of £20,000. This donation will play a vital role in enabling us to continue providing essential support to families living with dementia in our community.

The Heveningham Hall Country Fair Trust, a registered charity, is well-known for its successful events, including the annual Country Fair and the Heveningham Fireworks. All proceeds from these events go directly to charity, benefiting a wide range of local causes.

"We are incredibly grateful for the continued partnership with Heveningham Hall Country Fair Trust" said Nicky Kelly, Vice Chair of H.D.C.F. "This generous grant will directly support our work with families impacted by dementia, and it helps to ensure that we can continue offering the vital services they rely on. We look forward to strengthening this relationship and working together to make a difference in the lives of those we serve". H.D.C.F. is committed to supporting individuals and families affected by dementia, offering resources, education, and care for both those diagnosed with dementia and their caregivers.

For more information see www.halesworthdementia.co.uk or email info@halesworthdementia .co.uk We also have a Facebook page.

H.D.C.F. is proud to announce the successful completion of its transformative reminiscence project, "Remembering Yesterday, Caring Today", which has provided vital support to people living with dementia and their carers. The project, which ran for eight weeks, saw 13 participants – including 7 individuals living with dementia and five carers – come together each Saturday at the Pear Tree Centre in Halesworth. Over three hours each week participants explored and rediscovered their past lives through laughter, music, play and conversation, creating cherished memory books to treasure at home.

"We are thrilled with the impact "Remembering Yesterday, Caring Today" has had on both the participants and the facilitators" said Nicky Kelly, Vice Chair of H.D.C.F. "This project has not only promoted positive well-being and social inclusion but has also helped foster a strong sense of community and shared understanding between people living with dementia and their carers".

The sessions were led by five trained facilitators, with additional support from two volunteers. The project was made possible thanks to the generosity of the Pear Tree Fund, which donated use of their space for the sessions. Quotes from participants reveal the deep impact of the project:

"That I am not alone" – Participant with dementia.

"We were strangers when we met, and now it feels like family" – Carer.

"It has been a privilege to be part of such an incredible project" - Facilitator

The project was affiliated with the European Reminiscence Network, founded by Pam Schweitzer. The Network promotes the use of reminiscence activities to improve the lives of people living with dementia by helping them reconnect with their past'

SONIC WAVE

SONIC WAVE is an exciting new concert series debuting on Friday, June 13th at The Cut in Halesworth. Behind it are Françoise Lamy and Graham Daniels of Suffolk-based artists Addictive TV. Designed to champion grassroots music, the series highlights artists who cross over folk, world, jazz, electronic and contemporary styles, featuring a dynamic mix of touring performers and local talent. This new initiative will bring an eclectic palette of musical experiences to rural Suffolk, and for many of the artists it will be their first time performing in East Anglia.

Lamy, creative producer said: "We're really excited about bringing some incredible original music to our doorstep all year round while nurturing the grassroots music scene at the same time."

A Suffolk resident these days, she added: "Receiving a grant from the Arts Council to launch this project is a huge vote of confidence in what we do. With venues around the country shutting down and touring costs soaring, the music scene is struggling. It's more important than ever to support local artists and venues. Sonic Wave is our way of widening music offerings and helping keep rural Suffolk's music scene strong."

The first night on June 13th 2025 is a double-bill with Zambian-Scottish singer-songwriter Namvula, who The Guardian called "a true original" and who's been enchanting audiences with her heartfelt melodies; and Norwich duo Sunda Arc (two-third of the well-known jazz-influenced Mammal Hands) who combine analogue synths with live saxophone, piano and bass clarinet to create rich and expansive soundscapes.

In September, Sonic Wave moves to The Fisher in Bungay, we will cover this in the May edition.

Both Lamy and Daniels have been involved in organising many music and arts initiatives over the years, including the music festival Optronica with the British Film Institute at the IMAX and BFI Southbank, the mediaarts festival Splice in east London that saw over 100 international artists booked, and more recently the east London community music project Plugged, that also continually streamed performances during the pandemic.

Their new endeavour Sonic Wave continues their work in showcasing talent and promises musical discoveries for residents of rural Suffolk.

WOMEN WHO INSPIRE

a night to remember at Halesworth Golf Club, March 7th. By Dr Kathy Ryan MBE

This is the twelfth year Blyth Valley Rotary has celebrated International Women's Day. While the wine flowed, inspiration, motivation, and raw emotion filled the audience as our three incredibly passionate speakers told stories.

Rotarian Dr Cathy Ryan MBE, set the scene, highlighting this year's theme of Accelerate Action. Reflecting back over the past 12 years and how our Action has helped so many women, locally, nationally and internationally. How lives have been saved, women's charities helped and individuals given the confidence to go forward to follow their dreams.

The first speaker was Rising Star Holly Rowley White, just 17 years old. Her passion for flying started when she was 14, she achieved her pilot's licence at 16, and she is now heading skywards to be a fighter pilot in the RAF. She gave an insight into how women pilots are still in the minority and how skills should be recognised equally and not gender related. She exuded confidence and is a true role model for young women to fight for their dreams.

A hard act to follow, but Dr Janee Miller OBE, gave us laughter and amazement as she shared her life story of being Miller the Mosquito Killer. Her work in Africa researching mosquitoes and diseases and helping to eradicate Malaria was groundbreaking and helped save millions of lives. She made us laugh with her plastic tubing and how, she had to suck the mosquitos into the tube to identify and iradicate. Then leaving the mosquitoes behind, we learnt that she continues to volunteer but is now focused on the Help2Ukraine Suffolk. Janee has supported the Suffolk Team raising funds to buy 4 ambulances and more on the way. She was also part of the team that drove them through the dangerous war zones to deliver them. We were amazed at her determination and bravery.

After a fantastic dinner and a game of 'heads and tails ', the proceeds of which went to 'Lend with Care,' which supports women's groups through micro financing, it was time to welcome our final speaker.

Angela Williams, a fellow Rotarian, had just returned from The Gambia, where she was teaching teachers and students how to use 'sight boxes'. A practical box of resources helping to educate blind children to play and grow in confidence and independence. It was incredible to see children playing, walking, and having fun independently while learning. This was life changing for these students. and for Angela. Angela had worked with the Sight Trust in Liverpool and committed to changing the lives of children internationally. Angela overcame personal tragedy to take the 'sight box' initiative to the Gambia. Her husband had passed away only a few weeks before, but she was determined to carry on with the work they started together. Angela is now planning another trip, but incredibly it's a one-way ticket, as she feels this is her future and she knows her husband Nigel will be with her in spirit

The Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Suffolk, Erica Clegg, ended the evening by thanking the speakers for their dedication, motivation, and commitment to the work they do, as well as their passion and drive for enabling change and improving the lives of Women.

Thank you Walfinch Home Care Suffolk Coastal, our Sponsors

Saturday 5th April - Be There!!!

In 525BC a sandstorm buried hundreds of soldiers in the Egyptian desert

A weekend away that feels more like a week! That's our experience of Brighton.

From our parking space in Buckingham Road - booked through justpark.com – we have driveway parking and can forget about the car altogether. We stay at Leonardo Hotels in Stroudley Road, near the railway station. Two bathrooms, each with a bath, as well as a shower in our interconnecting rooms.

Dinner at Bistro du Vin in Ship Street is down the other end of the city by the seafront. It's a beautiful old building, superbly maintained. Our waitress for the evening is Paulina, who greets us and takes our coats. This is sophisticated dining celebrating French cuisine. When Paulina expertly pours the Pinot Grigio she does so with one hand behind her back, cradling the bottle in her other hand, ensuring that she doesn't lean over the diner. These little things make for a superior dining experience. The cutlery and glasses are pristine and the white table cloths are crisp and immaculate when we arrive (not when we leave...). For starters Henry has melon and a red berry compot as do his sisters, Heidi and Harriett. Henry loves the melon. Curry soup for Caroline, prawn cocktail for me. It's the main course where Bistro du Vin really excels. Caroline goes for Beef Provençale and the beef melts in the mouth, one of the diners on the next table agrees. My cod and vegetables can't be faulted. The accompanying glazed carrots, parsnips and French fries make for a really delightful meal. Henry enjoys his two Cumberland sausages and chips. The girls have chicken. A sundae follows for Henry's dessert while the girls have crème brûlées.

Back at our warm hotel we all have a good night's sleep thanks to Leonardo Hotels' Dream beds and fresh white bed linen. By eight-thirty next morning we're in the brightly coloured, modern dining hall having a leisurely breakfast – we don't need to check out until eleven. There's so much choice; continental, full English and vegetarian. I have to try a little of each and it's all very good.

It's only twenty minutes' walk to the Sealife Centre, which is the oldest aquarium in the world! Housed in guite a magnificent Victorian building some of windows large are cleverly its incorporated into some of the fish tanks. arrive photos As we are taken by eventsphototeam.com. There are so many sea creatures here, of all shapes, colours and varieties. Virtual reality from ImmotionVR helps us to further immerse ourselves at Sealife. We each sit down strap a headset on. which and introduces us to Manta rays and makes us feel like we are actually in the boat speeding through the water in somewhere like the Maldives.

At The Royal Palace we learn that this India inspired dome-roofed John Nash architectural wonder was built from 1787 to around 1815 for King George IV as a party palace and that the artist Constable, who lived in the city for a while, couldn't stand it. As you might expect, this once royal residence is lavishly decorated with exquisite wallpapers and chandeliers. The banqueting hall is massive.

HALESWORTH BRANCH OF CANCER RESEARCH

Hello everyone. By the time this article goes out we will have held our annual Big Breakfast and I will let you know how we got on in the next edition of The Bugle Magazine. We held our AGM on Saturday March 1st in the Co-op Community Room which was very well attended. All the officers were re-elected and the committee remains the same.

Dr Clarke our President opened the meeting and praised the advances being made by Cancer Research, in his closing remarks he thanked the committee and volunteers for continuing to raise funds for this vital research.

Sophia France our Area Relationship Manager then explained some aspects of the current research being carried out, especially on two vaccines. Ovarianvax for ladies who have the BRCA gene mutation which means they are at a higher risk of getting Breast or Ovarian Cancer and also Lungvax for those at high risk from lung cancer. These are incredible strides forward in our race to beat cancer, but we can't do it without your help and support, so please continue to visit our events throughout the year. Our next event will be our Spring Fair on Saturday 17th May in Holton Village Hall 10.30am-2pm.

We will be serving light lunches and delicious desserts from 11.30 am and we will have all our usual stalls. Also we always have a garden stall at our Spring Fair so anyone who has green fingers please think of us as you start the seed sowing and taking cuttings season and perhaps do a few extra for our stall, we would be very grateful and your contributions would be greatly appreciated.

Our annual street collection dates are now confirmed as Friday 27th June Halesworth Thoroughfare and Saturday 28th June Halesworth Co-op. Please stop and say hello to our collectors, we are all very friendly and it brightens our day if you stop for a chat.

Thank you for supporting Cancer Research UK. For more information please contact:-Dawn Davis (Chair) Tel:01986 873640.

NORFOLK OPEN STUDIOS EVENT CANCELLED.

Organisers have announced that this year's Norfolk Open Studios event will sadly, not go ahead.

The award-winning scheme, which was set to celebrate 30 years in 2025, saw fewer applications from artists, creators and markers wanting to take part this year, making the event unfeasible.

Over the course of three decades, Norfolk Open Studios has shone a spotlight of thousands of the county's artists at all stages of their careers – from school and college students through to emerging talent and established and professional artists.

Norfolk Open Studios was due to take place between 12th and 27th July 2025.

Volunteers Brighten Up Southwold with Bridge Makeover and Blooming Verges

The local volunteer group, New Leaf Reydon and Southwold has been busy enhancing the area's natural beauty with a series of community-led monthly projects and general maintenance of the area , including regular litter picks.

The group recently completed a significant makeover of Mights Bridge in Southwold. This involved a much-needed repainting of the bridge 2024, Followed by a dedicated effort to remove invasive plants like Alexander's and Green Aconite that were choking out native species. To encourage biodiversity, the volunteers have replaced the invasive plants with a vibrant array of native bulbs. This includes cheerful daffodils, enchanting foxgloves, delicate winter aconite, graceful snowdrops, fragrant lavender, colourful poppies, and a touch of bluebells, among others.

Today, the group took another step towards enhancing the local environment by erecting bird boxes throughout the area. These will provide safe nesting sites for a variety of bird species, further enriching the local ecosystem.

Looking ahead, New Leaf Reydon and Southwold have ambitious plans to create a thriving bluebell wood. This exciting project will not only enhance the visual appeal of the area but also provide a valuable habitat for local wildlife.

"We are incredibly proud of the work our volunteers have accomplished," said Patrick Huggins creator of the New Leaf Reydon and Southwold volunteer group.. "These projects are a testament to the power of community action in creating a more beautiful and sustainable environment for everyone to enjoy."

We have received an agreement from Southwold Millennium Foundation to finance £250 worth of bluebell bulbs and their permission to use the land to create a bluebell wood next to the Stella Peskett Millenium Hall

The Story of Doo-Wop The TestostaTones

The Seagull Theatre, Lowestoft Thursday 22nd May,

The theatre show The Story of Doo-Wop, performed by vocal quartet, The TestostaTones, arrives at The Seagull Theatre, Lowestoft, on Thursday 22nd May.

The production explores the history of the Doo-Wop vocal style, which emerged in the 1950s and played a key role in shaping early rock and roll. Originating from street corners, barbershops, and churches, Doo-Wop groups captivated audiences and quickly transitioned from performing on the streets to dominating the airwaves and recording studios.

The Story of Doo-Wop is uniquely presented as a live radio broadcast, hosted by disc jockey Chuck Anderson, who takes the audience on a journey through the golden era of Doo-Wop. Featuring performances by The TestostaTones, a group that has sung for The Queen, Olly Murs, and Arnold Schwarzenegger and has been featured on BBC Radio 2, the show brings classic hits to life, including 'Blue Moon', 'Earth Angel', 'Runaround Sue', 'Teenager in Love', 'Why Do Fools Fall in Love', and 'In The Still of the Night', among many more.

Group member Richard Ainslie says, "We are really looking forward to performing at The Seagull Theatre. It's always a joy to bring this music to life, and we can't wait to share the experience with the audience in a rare visit to our hometown."

Tickets for the show are priced at ± 14 (± 11 concessions) and are available from the theatre box office on 01502 589726 or online at www.theseagull.co.uk

The Cupper Family A talk by Geoffrey Robinson. Report by Jane Evans

The Alde Valley Suffolk Family History Group (AVSFHG) were delighted to welcome to the Fromus Centre, Saxmundham in February, Geoffrey Robinson who delivered a highly entertaining and informative talk about the Cupper family from Suffolk who emigrated to America the latter half of the 19th Century. Geoffrey Robinson is a well-known speaker and author as well as member of Worlingworth Local History Group and Recorders Secretary to the Suffolk Local History Council. Geoffrey informed us that Henry Adams Cupper was born 1st April 1845 at Benhall Place Farm, Benhall Low Street which is a small village just a couple of miles from Saxmundham.

Henry Cupper was brought up in Benhall and then Framlingham, educated at a private school in Yoxford and then trained in farm management by his uncle. He met Cordelia Harriet Capon and they married in 1872. Cordelia was born at Red House Farm in Framlingham in 1849, hailing from a wellrespected farming family, so the marriage merged two Suffolk farming families. Geoffrey explained that here in the UK the price of grain had dropped due to cheap American imports and because the National Agricultural Labourers Union wanted increased pay for farm labourers, the farmers sacked their workers and employed non-union labour. It was a time of threatened harvests and turmoil, all good reasons for the Cupper family to consider emigration to the promised fertile soil of America.

The family emigrated from Liverpool to New York on a steamship the SS Abyssinia, a weekly mail carrier owned by Cunard. Their passage cost about 60 guineas and arrived 2 days late due to stormy weather, and Cordelia was pregnant with their 4th child.

They then took the train from New York, an 8-9 day journey stopping for water for the engine, not the passengers, on their way to Oregon where they stayed for a year. They eventually settled at a homestead which they obtained by "squatters rights", a few miles northwest in what is now known as Cupper Creek, near Monument, Oregon.

Evidently a Native Indian uprising forced the family into Fort Heppner in 1878. To put this era into perspective Geoffrey mentioned that just two years earlier in 1876 General Custer had been defeated at the Battle of Little Big Horn!

In 1885 the family returned to Suffolk in order to purchase horses and livestock to take back. From a Dennington Lodge auction Geoffrey ascertained that Henry Cupper purchased Suffolk Punches, 2 colts and a mare as well as Suffolk sheep.

How did Geoffrey know so much about the Cupper family? As part of his research Geoffrey had managed to trace the last descendant of the family, Hank Cupper. They kept in touch and eventually met up in person in the USA in 2012!

The talk was fascinating and many in the audience knew of their own families emigrating to the New World, so this pioneer family's story brought it all to life.

Barn Owls & Red Kites

The Blyth Valley and Southwold group of the Suffolk Wildlife Trust welcomed Simon Dudhill, from the Hawk and Owl Trust, to talk about his work with barn owls and red kites. Simon has worked for many years with owls and other raptors, monitoring their progress, and building nest boxes suitable for each type of bird. Owls don't build their own nests, but rely largely on outbuildings and trees. The reduction of these habitats has meant that now 80% of barn owls use large oblong or triangular boxes, which you may well have seen. If a barn owl chick falls out of its box, it is in grave danger, as its parents do not look for it, or try to feed it. However, it is sometimes possible to foster a found chick by placing it in another carefully selected nest box. Simon and his colleagues monitor over 800 boxes in an area radiating out from Peterborough. They are licensed to check and ring the birds, and happily this species is now generally secure.

The second part of the talk was about red kites. Spain has asked the RSPB for help with its declining red kite population.

Northamptonshire is highly populated with kites, and it is here that Simon, as part of a team, is finding chicks to help with this project. The scheme has been running for three years now, and so far ninety-six chicks have settled into their new homes. The process is done with great care. Forestry England supplies experienced and licenced climbers who can bring chicks down to the ground. There is always one chick left in the nest, and the same nest is not revisited for three years. They are carefully and fully health checked, ringed, and fitted with GPS trackers before their journey to their new habitat. They are now breeding successfully with local birds, and rearing their young.

The photography was beautiful, and it was a fascinating and enjoyable evening.

Our next meeting is back at the Southwold Arts Centre, IP18 6JP, on Thursday April 10th, at 7.30 pm. There is a short AGM, followed by a film, The River Gipping, featuring Paul Heiney. There are refreshments and a raffle. Admission free.

VOXCETERA CHAMBER CHOIR presents SPRING'S SWEET VOICE: CHORAL MUSIC FROM BYRD TO BACHARACH Saturday 24 May, 7.3°pm at Holy Trinity Church, Blythburgh, Suffolk

Following their triumphant concert last spring, London-based chamber choir Voxcetera will return to the "Cathedral of the Marshes" in Blythburgh, Suffolk on 24 May to share a programme of choral music featuring compositions by Mozart, Byrd, Brahms, Elgar, Ola Gjeilo, Karl Jenkins, John Rutter and more.

The concert features both traditional European sacred music, and secular treats including selections of Elgar's charming "Songs from the Bavarian Highlands" and John Rutter's haunting arrangements of folk songs from his collection The Sprig of Thyme. There will also be work by the popular and prolific choral composer Paul Ayres including his version of Burt Bacharach's (They long to be) Close To You.

Jane Hopkins, Voxcetera's founding conductor, says:

"Bringing Voxcetera to Holy Trinity Church last year was something of a bucket-list fulfilment. And having enjoyed such a warmly receptive audience, we were all excited to come back and share more music. I'm lucky enough to have become very familiar with this part of the world - I married a boy from Wangford - and seeing the "Cathedral of the Marshes" towering over the landscape at the end of journeys from London always feels like a happy and magical welcome.

"This year's programme is full of variety – you'll hear music that is moving, uplifting exhilarating, plaintive, and just plain fun.

There's something for everyone to enjoy."

Founded in 2009, Voxcetera has performed at venues across the capital including the prestigious St Martin-in- the-Fields, St John's Smith Square and the South Bank Centre and at events for the British Library and Science Museum, as well as further afield in the UK and overseas. This concert is the choir's fourth visit to Suffolk, having also performed in Newmarket and Earl Soham. The choir will be accompanied by Paul Ayres on piano and organ. Tickets are available now from www.voxcetera.co.uk. See our ad on page 31

THE LADY IN THE CHECK-OUT LINE

At the end, the Alzheimer's had left his mother a lost. old woman who would sit all day in her geriatric chair staring off into the distance. He would visit her at the church home and sit by her side, trying his best to lure the old light back into her eyes, hoping to see for just a moment the spark of recognition that would sometimes reappear out of the blue. On their last day together she was particularly feeble, and the afternoon had been long with silence. He had turned sadly to leave when he felt her hand reach for his. When he looked back into her eyes, they were soft and alive, and he could see that his mother recognized him. He felt her hand tighten around his. She leaned close and said, in words just above a whisper, "There was a woman in the check-out line who thought you were the most beautiful baby."

That was all. Soon her eyes went dull, and there was no elaboration, and he knew that none would come. The next morning, the call came from the home, and they told him that his mother had died in the night. In the years that followed he thought often about his mother's last words to him and about the woman in the check-out line. She was in his thoughts when he wrote, "Sometimes the most lasting memory is of the smallest kindness," and again, "There is no effect more disproportionate to its cause than the pleasure bestowed by a small compliment."

There was a woman once who took a moment to compliment a young mother on her baby. Did she ever think again of her kind gesture? Did she imagine that her words would be carried in another person's memory for a lifetime? Did she guess that fifty years later, a dying old woman, searching her crippled memory for words to console a grieving son, would say to him, "There was a woman in the check-out line who thought you were the most beautiful baby."

A cubic mile of ordinary fog contains less than a gallon of water.

I stood talking with two men recently as they were watching a pair of pigeons sitting on a wire. One of the men looked up and said "There is a good dinner."

He went on to tell me that they make a lovely pie. 'But aren't they vermin?' I asked.

'Yes' he said unhesitatingly 'but they still make a good pie!' He smiled.

I looked up at the pigeons as they sat there lovingly preening one another and the conversation continued.

I thought of the letter I had once received about a Muntjac injured on the road, the writer of which was really was quite dismissive of the animal. Once labeled as vermin, that appeared to herald the end of any concern for the creature, much like the Muntjac and rats.

The man went on to say that vermin is defined as any animal, insect or bird that damages crops trees and/or habitat, and as pigeons damage crops, they are vermin. Vermin appears to be a label that mankind has attached to any animal that he does not want to share the planet with. Any animal, bird or insect that he thinks he can do without. The label of 'vermin' seems to imply that the eradication of this species would not be mourned, in fact, it would be actively encouraged perhaps.

I have seen the love that pairs of pigeons, doves, even the humble sparrow share with each other. I have seen questioning despair in the eyes of Muntjac, dogs, cats and other animals as they lay dying after being hit by vehicles. They lived their lives in balance. They may have eaten crops, chewed at trees or dug burrows but that is what they do. Carrying disease is also something that they do.

If you travel to indigenous tribes the world over and speak to the sages and the shamen they will show you plants that heal and the plants that you must not touch because they will harm you. They will show animals that are poisonous and very dangerous to life. They do not want to kill these animals, snakes and insects. Nor do they want to kill the plants that are harmful. They respect all life and leave it alone. None are labeled as vermin and treated with contempt. If Great Spirit has put the plant there, they say, then it has a purpose in the web of life.

Modern man is so far out of balance with all of nature and the universe itself. He is merely a single strand in the web of life and is NOT it's master, though he sees himself as such. His ignorance contols his destructive actions. It is time to look to true spirituality and the workings of the universe in terms energy, frequency and vibration.

Only then will mankind grow in true wisdom

It's kind of scary when the weatherman is the closest one to telling you the truth on the news!

The ultimate sacrifice

A long time ago I worked as a volunteer at a hospital. There was a little girl, who suffered from a serious disease. The only chance for her recovery was a blood transfusion from her five-year-old brother, since he had experienced the same disease and had miraculously recovered. Thus he had the needed antibodies to struggle with this illness.

So the doctor told about the situation to the boy and asked him, if he is willing to give his blood to his sister. He hesitate only for a moment, then the little boy took a deep breath and said: "Yes, I will do this, if it will save her life". During the transmission his sister was laying in bed next to him. The boy looked at her and smiled, but gradually his face became pale and his smile faded.

He asked the doctor with a trembling voice: "Will I start to die now?"

The little boy thought that he would have to give all his blood to save the life of his beloved sister and yet he did not hesitate. Anon
